Gasometer Oberhausen

Exhibition “The Fragile Paradise” (Das zerbrechliche Paradies) on the beauty of nature and the human impact on the environment, a journey through our earth’s climate history.

The Gasometer in Oberhausen is one of the most famous industrial monuments of the Ruhrgebiet. It used to function as industrial gas tank and was converted into an exhibition hall in 1993 and just renovated in 2021. Despite its not so charming appearance from the outside, as it is common for the industrial Ruhr-area, we recommend a visit! More information in four languages can be found at: www.gasometer.de/en/

As connections can vary, we always recommend looking them up by yourself to get the relevant information. Usually using Google Maps on your smartphone works just fine, but the best option for both train and bus is using the website of the main German railway company: www.bahn.com/en

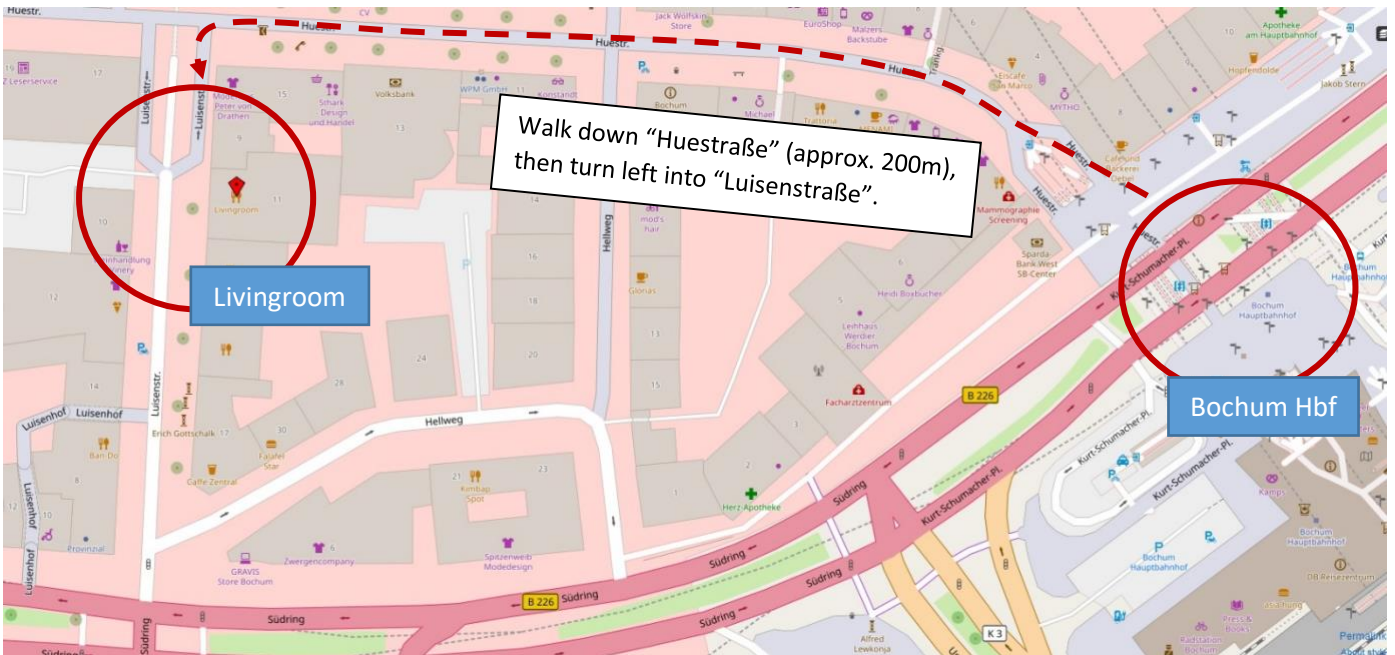

How to get there

- 1) To get to Bochum Hbf (Bochum main station) from your current location, please look at the corresponding directions. From there you can reach Oberhausen Hbf (Oberhausen main station) in around 45 Minutes via various options – change in Essen, Duisburg, Mülheim, or Gelsenkirchen.
- 2) From Oberhausen Hbf you can take a bus or tram to the station called “Neue Mitte”.
- 3) From “Neue Mitte” it is only a short walk to the Gasometer.
